Raue Center names new board president

Author(s): NORTHWEST HERALD Date: July 22, 2010 Section: News

CRYSTAL LAKE – The new board president for the Raue Center for the Arts said he hoped to expand participation in the center's endowment fund, increase regional awareness of the center, and continue the family-friendly programming for which the Crystal Lake facility has become known. Matthew Turk, formerly the vice president of the board, became the board president this month, the Raue Center for the Arts said in a news release.

Turk is the executive vice president of INTREN Inc. The Union-based business is a provider of underground and overhead, inside and outside, electrical, gas and telecommunications services.

He has lived in Crystal Lake since 1983 with his wife, Sheri, and two boys. Turk also has served the community as a Eucharistic minister at area assisted-living communities, and by coaching and volunteering at St. Thomas the Apostle School.

“It’s wonderful to have another passionate and dedicated partner as we look to build on the legacy of Paula Dorion-Gray and Bill Dwyer,” said Richard Kuranda, executive director at the Raue.

The nonprofit Raue Center for the Arts, at 26 N. Williams St., Crystal Lake, is celebrating its 10th anniversary of bringing renowned entertainment and family programming to downtown Crystal Lake.

Also serving on the center's board are Jeffrey Keck, vice president; Chuck Stevens, treasurer; and Walter Packard, secretary.

New on the board are John Jacobson, Jack Minsley and Tim Paul, according to the news release.
